Ethical Design: The Right, The Wrong & The Difference

9:30 am—12:00 noon

Presented by Michael Thomas, FASID, CAPS

Hosted by The Washington Design Center, Washington, DC

DC/MD Approved (0.2 CEUs)

IDCEC Course #7752

Course Description: It's a challenge to know what's right and wrong in today's business world. So in this interactive session, learn what ethics means to those who practice in the design profession. This course includes the definitions and standards of ethics as they apply to the business of design. Learn ways to establish ethical guidelines, which are most important in navigating the "gray areas" everyone faces these days. Discover what designers believe about ethics in design and what ASID's legal counsel has to say about "what's right + what's wrong" through video interviews with Alan Siegel, Hon. FASID.

Instructor Profile: Michael A. Thomas is the President of The DESIGN Collective Group, Inc., a multi-faceted hybrid design/build firm in Jupiter, Florida and Phoenix, Arizona with a special interest in creating environments that are functional, practical and accessible to anyone, no matter the age or ability of the occupants. He is a licensed interior designer in Florida, has passed the National Council for Interior Design Qualification (NCIDQ) exam and is a "Certified Aging In Place" (CAPS) specialist.

Michael's interior design work has been widely published in various media and his first book, Residential Design for Aging In Place has been well received by interior designers, builders and architects across the country. Under the business umbrella of DesignSuccess.org, he provides continuing education for interior designers and architects from boutique conference settings and online Web-based training, to lecturing and facilitating numerous peer-to-peer workshops on such subjects as ethics, aging-in-place, strategic planning and management.

Michael is a dedicated ASID volunteer, having joined the organization in 1983. He has been the Florida South Chapter President, the ASID Chapter Support Team Chair, an ASID chapter strategic planning counselor, selected as the first ASID spokesperson on matters of Aging-In-Place and the first chair of the ASID Council on Aging In Place. Michael has served three terms on the National Board of Directors for ASID with one year as Director with Financial Oversight. In 2004 he was honored by his ASID peers with the designation of Fellow of the Society and he is currently serving as ASID's National President-Elect.
