Today's Designer—Green and Universal

9:30 am—12:00 noon

Presented by Donna Vining, FASID, IIDA, RID, CAPS

Hosted by The Washington Design Center, Washington, DC

DC/MD Approved (0.2 CEUs)

IDCEC Course #7857

Course Description: Can a designer design accessible spaces and at the same time keep the environment in mind? Yes!! Should a designer incorporate sustainable and lifespan methodology into programming and execution in addition to client needs? Absolutely! This CEU rests on the assumption that it is the ethical responsibility of designers to consider both for their clients, and will address how you can incorporate these two considerations in the design process. Become today's designer and apply sustainable and universal design principles simultaneously.

Instructor Profile: Donna Vining, FASID, IIDA, RID, CAPS is a Past President of the National Council for Interior Design Qualification (NCIDQ). She is a Past President of the Texas Gulf Coast Chapter of ASID, has served on the national board of ASID and currently serves on the Codes & Legislative Advisory Council (CLAC). Donna is also the Executive Director for her state coalition, the Texas Association for Interior Design (TAID). She is registered in the state of Texas and holds an NCIDQ certificate. She graduated from North Texas State University with a double major in Interior Design and Business. She is President of Vining Design Associates, Inc., in Houston. She won first place in the first Southern Accents/ASID kitchen contest, among other awards, and is published frequently in local and national publications. In addition to her interior consulting business, Donna is a partner in Seminars by Design, a company that provides continuing education for interior designers. Recently, Donna received her CAPS (Certified Aging In Place Specialist) designation from the NAHB, National Association of Home Builders. Her philosophy is that all interiors should be universally designed with the environment in mind. It is all about protecting the Health, Safety and Welfare of the public.
